A Grand Private Entertainment--The French Market Sunday Morning.

The Return Trip--Adventures at Bolivar--Illinois by Daylight.

To the Editor of The Tribune.

March 9. It is surprising how many operative rules of procedure fit themselves,

if naturally, into the French Market.

An evening's rest is to serve. But there are journeys and journeys. If one is about to travel in one's own country,

to New York--the way is plain, and all things familiar. But if one is on the eve of starting on a tour in foreign lands the case is quite different. To most non-combatant people in this part of the world the South is a foreign land. Experience is a chief factor, of pleasure; of course, in traveling;

the duty to write down and print the observations and results of each excursion into unknown lands, as these stand most to individual experience.

A charming lady said to me at New Orleans the other day that she prayed all the way down Chicago. I doubt if we ever entirely overcame our first timidity on taking a seat in the carriage or steamboat. The passenger seats almost in a fine sleeper in a train of cars the line on which the procession was to move, carin full dress, from the hotel to the grand hall.

To hurry to the grand hall at the Opera-House

the subject of the display was

THE KING OF FANCY.

Like a banquet that is over, it is a question

how far any one is interested in this exhibition.

The lease of the Singer Building to Arnold,
Constable & Co., as announced by THE TRIBUNE
some time ago, is confirmed. That firm will occupy the building as soon as it is completed. They will open a wholesale and retail business with departments of which will be conducted in the Singer Building. Its is a permanent event. Its effects will be beneficial to the commercial as well as real-estate interests of the city. Arnold, Constable & Co.
will occupy a position in the dry-goods trade of this country among the very first. They do a very heavy wholesale business in their store on Canal street, and their retail store on Broadway and Nineteenth street is second to none but Stewart's. Their extension of their business to Chicago shows that they have come like A. T.
Stewart & Co., to realize that their market is the Western. The city will be greatly improved by the addition of such a house as the Singer Building.

RENTS.
The demand for houses to be rented is increasing rapidly. The demand for house-agents. Tenants are adding their decisions whether to move or renew their leases.
This indicates that there is a good deal of looking for houses. The demand for houses is in good demand, but the week has been consumed in negotiation, without any important results beyond those already announced.

NOT ESTABLISHED THEMSELVES HERE.

The example of A. T. Stewart & Co. and Arnold, Constable & Co. must be followed by their competitors in the trade. The Eastern leaders in other branches of business must come here for the same reason. Chicago is being reformed every day by business men from the East, as our real-estate articles have shown, and we may consider that the extension of this city is unimpeded by any obstacle. The demand for houses to be rented is increasing every day, and the weekly rental is increasing to a marked extent.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BOSTON. March 4.—Everything is at a high-tide just now in the way of social festivities and amusements. When the popular "Exiles" went from the "Boston," McCullough came and brought high art and Shakespeare. And now, with Modjeska at the Museum,—a spite of Lent, in spite of Moody and Sankey, in spite of a "Christian Matron,"—drawing enormous crowds to the theatre, the "Candy-land" have also been booked at "The Globe," with the usual enthusiasm at fever-heat, the popular "Evangeline" at the "Globe," the Handel and Haydn Society girding up all their powers for a grand oratorio, and no end of fine concerts, among which the most conspicuously notable is that by Theodore Thomas, with Miss Wild, the German prima donna; Mme. Schiller, the pianist; and Sig. Tagliapietra, the baritone. With all this comes the Old South ball, for that "fund" is not yet large enough to pay the demands with the New South asks for. Modjeska's gift. To see the preparations for this last-named event.

AMONGST THE CHURCH FOLK.—And the "worst-folk,"—to watch the crowds that nightly flock in and out of the Museum, where Modjeska holds her reign,—at once suggests a question which it is not easy to answer, and that is, "Where are all the converts that wept, and wailed, and wrote themselves down miserable sinners; who made solemn promises to turn back upon the wicked ways of this world, and to henceforth walk only in the way of righteousness?" Yet, if we look all these! Have they suddenly discovered that the play-house is not so bad as it is painted, and they may safely venture within its doors? It may be suggested that the converts are not of those who flock to the play-house. Then the converts were sadly in the minority, and not such a triumph of numbers as we have been led to suspect; for, as one watches the throngs that go in and out of the theatres, and sees the varying faces from night to night, it would be difficult to detect the converts, and the those that have not been of these crowds were of the smallest of minorities indeed.

But, not to contend over this point, let me say how great a success was Mr. McCULLOUGH'S ACTING in the Shakespeare parts that he essayed, as well as that of Mr. Louis James, who supported him. Oh theatre-goers, who are not easily moved into enthusiasm, have been very warm in their praise of Mr. J. L. Scott's acting. One of these in speaking of the play of "Jocko,"—"a jester, a fool, and a toletier," so well declared that Mr. James' "Jocko" was exceptionally good, and exceptionally original. He looks the fellow honest that Odello takes him to be at the outset; there is no Mephistopheles make-up, but gradually the spirit of ambition, of craft and duplicity, develops, and the Iago who had the power to work such deadly mischievous because of his enormous capacity for deceit, not the least of which was to look the friend while he plotted the foe, and to be a master of the art of dissimulation, was born of this. The Odello of Mr. James' was exceptionally good, and the Iago—the shades "Jocko souriant" and "Jocko expert."

Manier was the astonishing comedian and acrobat who created all this enthusiasm, who enticed the Duchess de Berry to the Porte Saint-Martin, and who turned the head of a young Brazilian heiress, and married her and his fortune. A LETTER-CARRIER AND A CHURCH-MEMBER.

JOCKO.

Translated from the French of Jules Verne, for The Tribune, by Ernest Seznec.

The recent revival of this extraordinary drama of Rochefort and Gabriel at the Theatre Folies-Bergere recalls a world of memories among those now living who witnessed its performance fifty years ago at the Porte Saint-Martin, when Jocko was all the vogue, and the receipts of the theatre amounted to $1,000,000. The scenes, colors, and toilettes of a la Jocko—the shades "Jocko souriant" and "Jocko expert."

Manier was the astonishing comedian and acrobat who created all this enthusiasm, who enticed the Duchess de Berry to the Porte Saint-Martin, and who turned the head of a young Brazilian heiress, and married her and his fortune.

Those who have seen Masurel still speak of him with enthusiasm which years have not weakened, and as of his great dramatic power, which it can be seen, when it is given amid thunders of applause and with an enthusiasm which seems to imply that for the nonce an artist could not have another equal. And terrible in another sense than the "Christian Matron" means does Modjeska make this play, in that she is the first to bring it to the public. It is a remedy, however, that is apt to either cure or kill.

ST. MODJESKA WHEAT.—For the play, she has been heartily enjoyed and applauded. The charming Poile takes all hearts and heads by storm, leaving no one to find fault with her so far, unless the verdict can be taken for a fatiguing which is scarcely to be seen, when it is given amid thunders of applause and with an enthusiasm which seems to imply that for the nonce an artist could not have another equal.

And terrible in another sense than the "Christian Matron" means does Modjeska make this play, in that she is the first to bring it to the public.

How can any one say that this play is democratic, when it is given in a dress rehearsal without a friend or without home? Why it seems to me the greatest moral lesson that one can receive to see how it is given.

THE DAY, GLITTERING LIFE.—which begins to dance-music and with a setting of diamonds, gradually comes down step by step to this noisy, hopeless, dreary life.

The day, when it comes, is over, and she passes out of the theatre after the closing scene.

But, outside of all this, let me step into another sphere, and of Miss Poile's cooking-class. Mrs. Hovey's famous cooking-class, on Tremont street, where once sat some of the most distinguished people that any American city could boast, has been closed for a time, which it is to be hoped will not be long.

After the most approved system of hygienic laws used with French skill, we get instruction in the art of cooking, in the use of French ruses, and all manner of wonderful jellies, together with the most needful soups and sauces.

Her mission is scarcely in the line of Miss Corson's, but she has the same desire to instruct, the result in the oversight resulting from knowledge in many a fine household might, perhaps, do something towards keeping the housewives of Boston from the bankruptcy which marks Miss Corson's economy a necessity. The best of it is, that this cooking-class is likely to be a financial success, for many recruits, and that will make itself a rich property.

THE REMARK that one hears on every side, and over the country, is that the day of the rich man means. It gives one a little rest to hear of these jellies, and soups, and sauces, after the long reign of History, and German, classical, and French, and Italian, and French class and club for the cultivation of the intellect. It will form, too, a little variety in the lives of those who have been giving themselves up to soul and body to the chase and the making of Macrame lace.

Join the cooking-class! Yes, by all means!—excepting, of course, the other day, looking over the top of his nervous, overstrained shoulders, who were volubly discussing this new topic. Modjeska glanced up reproachfully.

"Oh, no; not at all," replied the patterer, "but I thought it was a cooking-class I should like to carry these things round in my pocket quite frequently."

THE SUFFERER FROM "TUDY."—The day turns and dispenses two or three squares of Macrame lace to his coat.

Now that I see, it is a burning question. I am reminded of a little incident that came under my own observation the other day in a very familiar place, down with a friend at a West-End house where there was a great deal of remarkable variety and quality, and where this variety is daily set forth upon a bill of fare written in very fine and flowing hand. It looked like the hand of an accomplished account-

"That is written by our cook," volunteered my friend. I looked up in incredulous surprise.

"And a woman at that—an English woman,"

as the next point of information.

I thought I was prepared for almost any emergency in Boston; but I must say that this took my breath away. I remember, some years ago, being informed by the

COOK.

He half raised up on his hands, and, dragging himself towards the inclosure, disappeared, and, returning with the child, handed them to me, and then went to his room, and then to his death. The little being he had so lately rescued from the sea carried him with her tiny hands, and went over him as he lay beside his last breath. I thought, our protector and her friend. The parents' grief was soon turned to joy on learning of the safety of their child, who had indeed been lost, but the coroner also minded with those of gratitude as they listened to the fate of Jocko.

This is a simple tale, and thus related seems very like a legend, but certain one could well imagine such a spectacle without experiencing the most poignant emotions. The artist has animated Jocko with the highest and most tender passions of human nature, and the artist's soul seems to have been in the body of the boy he painted, but it is the best of his efforts, with the exception of "The Boston Boys." The coloring is strong, too," replied the man.

"Why don't you come right out and say that?"

"I'm a good mind to."

The Captain looked at him in wonder, and the stricken pinched his nose to stop the flow of blood.

"You see, I was having a fight with him. The boys were throwing snow-balls, and a horse was running away, all at the same time. I was to stop him, and I saw his man hit me when I might have run over or struck with a snow-ball! It's awful to swear to a boy!"

He was too conscientious to secure any satisfaction.

CHARLIE'S STORY.

I was born in a simple home, in a little two-year-old, forever.

"Teasing," "Talk a 'tory," "Please to me."

"Well," reflectively, "I'm mense: Mamma, I did see a kity."

Great—big—tiny, on the fence."

Mamma smiles. Five little fingers.

"Covey, I am so angry!" I tell him.

"But I kiss the finger-tips."

"Well," said he, "I will—Mamma, I did see a doggie."

Great—big—doggie, on the fence."

"Rather similar, your stories."

Are you a jester, or a fool, or a cook."

The artist suddenly took up the brush.

"I know a nice, new 'tory,"

"Please to me," "Please to me."

"I'm mense: Mamma, I did see a cactus."

Total, $17,000.

CHARLIE'S STORY.

The currency movement has turned in favor of the city, and the receipts of currency are larger than the shipments.

Finances generally are dull.

Discount lines are steady, showing no marked tendency to decline or advance.

The offerings of country paper for redemptions are growing smaller.

The applications from customers for accommodations are not moderate. Merchants are coming in with a good many sales, and buyers themselves meet their maturing paper with general promptness.

Rates of discount are 7% to 10% on New York exchange.
